TO INDIFFERENCE.

COME foe to care, luke warm Indifference,
Thy breath will heal this frighten'd wounded ſenſe!
Then kindly wrap me, in thy chill embrace,
And far, O far, this ſore ſenſation chaſe!
O let me quick thy preſence hail,
And wrap me in thy coat of mail;
Poſſeſs my dreams, watch o'er my bed,
And torpid juices o'er it ſhed;
Come ſole poſſeſſion take of me,
And baniſh Senſibility!

For all the good it doth impart,
Is but to rend the trembling heart;
Is but to mad the feeble brain,
With throbs it ne'er would prove again:
Then come, poſſeſs the thinking pow'rs,
In apathy enwrap the hours,
And let me live alone in thee,
Eſtrang'd from Senſibility!

O bring thy breaſt plate quick of ſteel!
Too faſt theſe cruel darts aſſail;
Too deep, ah me! too deep I feel,
Ere long, moſt ſure they will prevail,
And hurl me headlong to the tomb,
Wrap'd yet in ſhades of deeper gloom!
Then come, make thy abode with me,
And baniſh Senſibility.

Tho' MARIAN weeps, why ſhould I too,
When weeping's all that I can do?
For tho' her little orphan brood,
Looks up to her in vain for food,
Can I, alas! their wants ſupply?
No, truth compels me to reply,
The little boon I could beſtow,
Would ſcarcely dry one tear of woe!
Then come, and make thy home with me,
And baniſh Senſibility.

Yet, tho' I would not wiſh to feel,
The pangs I have no power to heal;
I would rejoice that ſome there are,
Who feel they are heaven's peculiar care;
This pond'rous load of grief reſign,
And make their joys and comforts mine;
In others bleſſings would rejoice,
The giver praiſe, with heart and voice,
But that the way ſure would not be,
To baniſh Senſibility.

Thy breath can make the boſom whole,
Tho' rack'd each fibre of the ſoul,
Then come, apply thy ſovereign balm,
And make the mind ſerenely calm!
Come, ſole poſſeſſion take of me,
And baniſh Senſibility.

DEFENCE OF MR. EATON,
CONCLUDED.

Let unbiaſſed judgment compare this document with the extracts which have forced it before the public, and draw the inference. Let any man of military or diplomatic ideas, figure to himſelf the mortifying exhibition I muſt have made at the court of Tunis, after having ſo confidently reſiſted the Bey's reclamation on the ſcore of a blockade, which I then thought correct, now to find myſelf compelled to acknowledge that not a ſingle ſhip of our ſquadron had yet ſeen Tripoli, that they were all lying in Malta when this imperial veſſel ſailed from that port; and that the veſſel which was ordered on the expedition captured her within ſight of the ſhore.

The affair of the loan is as incorrectly ſtated in the extracts as that of the prize. This loan was partly compelled by the fraudulent exactions of the Bey's miniſter, and partly from the neceſſity of funds to proſecute the project with Hammet Baſhaw. This Baſhaw is the legitimate ſovereign of Tripoli. About ten years ago he was treacherouſly driven from his throne by his younger brother, then general of the camp, now reigning Baſhaw, and was conſtrained to take refuge in Tunis. At an early period of our war with Tripoli Mr. Cathcart ſuggeſted to me the project of uſing this ſovereign to aſſiſt us in chaſtiſing the perfidy of the uſurper; but I never entered decidedly upon it until the expedition of 1801 had failed. The progreſs of it cannot be detailed here; it ſhall appear hereafter. It is enough for my juſtification, that the Swediſh admiral was in the meaſure; that Captain M'Neil, when in command on the coaſt, pledged himſelf to ſupport it; that capt. Murray, who ſucceeded, though at a late hour, came into it—that it met the ſanction of government; and that commodore Morris engaged to it his co-operations. And it is enough to evince its feaſibility, that the Baſhaw is in his own territory at the head of a force formidable to the uſurper.

The condition of its ſucceſs, as it would affect us, was perpetual peace and hoſtages as the guarantee of it. A year ago laſt March I ſucceeded at ſome hazard, in getting the Baſhaw out of Tunis to Malta. The project was mature for execution in April following. I took care to communicate [illegible] at Gibraltar of the ſtage of the buſineſs; and why it has not ere this had all the ſucceſs its proſpect promiſed, is not for me to anſwer, it may yet ſucceed. My arrangements in this affair eventually, though quite contrary to my calculations, involved an expenſe of nearly thirty thouſand dollars; twenty two thouſand of which has been reimburſed by commodore Morris; a part of the balance ſtill remains due to me from the United States. Previouſly to the date of the communications atteſted by the commodore I had ſtated to him the reſult of theſe tranſactions. That, to meet the emergencies, I had been compelled to obtain a loan of the Bey's commercial agent on a credit of ſix months, and that the term expired fourteen days paſt. The commercial agent ſaid he thought forbearance might be obtained, by ſpeaking to the miniſter (to whom in fact the caſh belonged) until I ſhould receive funds from Government, to whom I had ſtated four months previouſly that I ſhould have need of twenty three thouſand dollars. The commodore engaged to ſpeak to the miniſter to this effect, on going to make his viſit of congee to the Bey. The morning aſſigned for this viſit the commercial agent came forward with additional claims on the ſcore of the prize; a warm diſcuſſion enſued which produced mutual irritation. We left the American houſe to proceed to the palace—carriages were waiting for the purpoſe. At the city gate the commodore ſhifted his courſe, and leaving the carriage ſtanding, ſteered for the marine to go on board, ſaying he would make his further communications with the palace through the medium of the conſulate. I accompanied him to the marine. This movement excited ſuſpicion in the agent; he followed after us, and perhaps willingly to indulge the little ire of the moment forbade his Sandal taking the commodore off. It was now too late to talk of accommodation; nothing would ſatisfy but the caſh. We returned to the conſular houſe and the commodore engaged to ſend this ſum of twenty two thouſand dollars from on board. The next day a viſit of congee was made at the palace. The queſtion was aſked the Bey whether this detention was by his order? He ſaid it was not cuſtomary for a commodore ever to depart without making him a viſit of congee. I could not forbear remonſtrating with the Bey in pointed and animated terms againſt this violation of national hoſtality, indignity, againſt honor of the United States, and outrage on my individual feelings & reputation. I ſtated to him the expectations I relied on for the means of balancing this loan; repeated to him with ſome emphaſis, what I had declared to him at the period of obtaining it, and what he well knew to be true, that the treacherous frauds of his miniſter had tended to compel the meaſure, and operated as fixed impediments to my extricating myſelf from it. The miniſter reſented the charge, and the Bey, taking part with him, ordered me to quit the kingdom. I thanked him, and ſaid I ſhould quit a court with no regret where I had experienced little elſe than violence and indignity, but demanded of him, if he had ought to object to my agency, to denounce me to my fellow citizens preſent. The Bey addreſſed himſelf to the commodore, ſaid "the conſul is a juſt man, of a good heart; but his head is wrong. He is too obſtinate for me I muſt have a conſul with a diſpoſition more congenial to Barbary intereſts!" I poured on the Bey and Miniſter the reproaches due to a ſucceſſion of injuries for years. The ſlaves attendant left the hall exclaiming "Good God! the American conſul will be cut in pieces!" Turning on my heels in an attitude to meet all events, I walked up and down the hall a moment; then, advanced to the Bey, tendered him my hand and bade him farewell! He preſſed mine in his, and ſaid "Conſul as a man I have nothing againſt you. I wiſh you well." Thus we parted. Four years I have ſtood before the piratical deſpot, under ever poſture of dureſs and menace. He never obtained a conceſſion from me. Since the war with Tripoli my ſituation has been peculiarly perilous. I have been threatened with chains, hard labor, death, to force me from poſitions which duty compelled me to hold, and have been laid under prohibitions exceedingly injurous to my property. Theſe are facts well known at Tunis. They are well known to every American acquainted with my agency there. And is the in my own country for the theſe ſacrifices?

The day ſucceeding the Bey's order to me to quit his court, I received from an intelligent, reſpectable chriſtian in Tunis, the letter of which the following is a tranſlated copy:

Sir, and much honored friend!

We behold you then finally forced out of Tunis, after having for years endeavored honorably to ſupport the intereſt of your nation, without one moment enjoying, during this epoch, the trifling conſideration vainly attached to the ſtation of a Conſul in Barbary! We behold you at length the victim, I hope momentarily, of a combination of events and intrigues, the origin of which, I venture to ſay, may be traced to the peace of the United States, with theſe regencies; whoſe expedients, unhappily for the cauſe of humanity, the civilized nations deſpiſe with too much haughtineſs and ignorance, and whoſe ridiculous pretenſions they flatter with too much baſeneſs and patience. Your peace with Tunis above all, was negociated under the moſt unfavorable auſpices. It ought, with ſome degree of reaſon to ſhock the perſonal pride of this bey, that the Dey of Algiers, or rather his jews, took an air of being your protectors, calculated to impreſs a notion of dependence on the part of the Tuniſian prince. This impolitic ſtep gave him no exalted idea of the genius of your government: and, indeed, your inactive war with Tripoli can impreſs him with no great opinion of your coercive powers.

Never had a conſul ſo thorny a path to clear as yourſelf—an object ſo difficult of attainment. He, who had the honor to repreſent your nation when you arrived here, by the ſlaviſh and cringing part he acted at this court, had the means and the baſeneſs to ſell your intereſts—the chief ſource, in my opinion, to which you may aſcribe your ſubſequent political embarraſsments. I will not conceal, what I obſerved at the time of negociating your treaty, that the bey of Tunis is not eſtabliſhing a peace with the U. States: it is a commercial ſpeculation: F is the political factor, and will gain the commiſſion!* I now venture to add, the bey had reaſon—the error was on the part of the United States. It is not aſtoniſhing that the ſucceſſor of F*, taking a poſition firm and analogous to the ſtation he came here to fill, ſhould ſurprize the bey by ſo ſingular a contraſt. He had a right to doubt whether this firmneſs were peculiar to your individual character, or whether it was that which your government wiſhed to diſplay here. Ought he not to ſay within himſelf—a nation who begins its repreſentation by one of my creatures has not the air of wiſhing to brave my pretenſions?

This inadvertancy in the choice of the firſt individual who ought, plainly ſpeaking, to fix in a degree the conſideration which the United States ſhould in future enjoy with this regency, is a fault of which the actual conſequences prove the magnitude, and the injurious impreſſions of which will be with difficulty eraſed; time will demonſtrate it.

Pardon theſe reflections; the idea of your departure force them from me.—— Friendſhip, founded in eſteem, participates the injuries which a friend experiences. I do not offer you my condolence; duty diſcharged inſpires not ſuch a ſentiment. I am, ſir, your devoted and faithful friend, ************.

March 7, 1803.

To Wm. Eaton, Eſq. Conſul of the U. States.

The morning of my departure, a foreign envoy at Tunis put into my hands a certificate, of which the following is a copy by tranſlation:

"WE the underſigned Conſuls and Agents of the European Governments, at the Regency of Tunis, certify that William Eaton, Eſq. Conſul of the United States of America, has, on every occaſion, ſupported the rights of his nation with dignity and integrity. It is with pleaſure we give him this teſtimony of the truth and of our friendſhip.

Done at Tunis the 20th of March, 1803.

(Signed) A. NYSSEN,
Conſul General of the Batavian Republic.
DEVOIZE,
Commiſſary General and Charge of Affairs of the French Republic.
HENRY CLARK,
Britiſh Charge of Affairs.
JOSEPH NODRIES,
[illegible] and Charge of Affairs of his Catholic Majeſty.
HOLCH,
His Daniſh Majeſty's Conſul General, &c.

On the paſſage to Gibralter we touched at Algiers. Mr. O'Brien came on board, ſeemed ſurpriſed to ſee me. I ſketched to him the events above detailed. He ſaid he had foreſeen a ſquall, from a circumſtance which he afterwards reduced to writing as follows:

"THIS may certify that in October, 1802 a reſpectable Jew Merchant from Tunis declared to me, and in the preſence of Bocris and Burnahs of Algiers, as alſo in the preſence of Captain Morris, that the Sapatap, or Tuniſian Miniſter had declared to ſaid Jew, that he would work the deſtruction of the American Conſul at Tunis. The Jew further added, that the Saptapa ſaid he would have an American Conſul more pliable to his views. Given under my hand this 20th day of March, 1803.

(Signed)
RICHARD O'BRIEN.

I aſked him if he knew for what reaſon the miniſter ſought my deſtruction. "None, Sir," ſaid he "except that he knows you are a d——d ſtaunch American!"

One obſervation. When it is conſidered that the United States have heretofore been in arrear to the Government of Tunis in engagements to the value of more than one thouſand dollars, and that the Bey had remained quiet for years with no other ſecurity than my perſon, it will be evident that the inſult offered the nation in the arreſt of the commodore could not ariſe from doubts about the payment of twenty thouſand dollars. The event reſulted from the irritation of the moment—and that irritation from a diſpute about ſome articles of the prize of no great value. A project of getting me out of the country may have been premeditated. I am apprehenſive it was ſo, for motives which both the Bey and Miniſter have clearly expreſſed. They want a conſul whoſe pliability ſhall be meaſured by their avarice, and whoſe ſenſe of national honor ſhall give no tone to his agency.

PHILADELPHIA, June 27.

Extract of a letter from New York, dated June 24.

"Arrived this morning the British schooner Plutus, Harriet, 25 days from Trinidad. Mr. Carmichael a passenger in the schr. informs, that the English May mail had arrived there; but that its contents were not known at the time of his sailing; that there had been an Embargo on all British vessels bound home for several days, in consequence of an expectation of war; that commodore Hood had sailed on a cruise, to touch at Martinique. Shortly after his sailing, a British ship of war reached Barbadoes, with dispatches for the Commodore; but learning that he sailed immediately proceeded in quest of him. The universal conjecture was, that this sloop of war brought out some important dispatches relative to the affairs of Europe, and the general impression was in favour of war.

The Anniversary of American Independence being at hand, I take the opportunity to recommend a suspension of business for that day.

It was with dissatisfaction I have witnessed, for some few years back, merchants and others keeping their stores open on the day which every American should rejoice, for being a native of a free and independent country. Whether it proceeds from meanness, I cannot tell; but in my eyes, it appears to originate from jealousey and a fear of your neighbour doing rather more business than yourself— but surely the trifling sum any person would gain by the business done on that day could be no object, when compared to the honor we would do our town by paying a respect to the spirit of '76.

An Alexandrian.

HOW difficult it is for men to restrain their natural dispositions, we may every day perceive. The dictates for the heart will often be an overmatch of cunning. How completely does every writing of the democrats betray the hidden tyranny of their hearts! How plainly do they avow, that if they could help it, the federal press should be lock-jawed forever! Those inconsistent souls; bodies we should say; who fill the air with buzzes about the liberty of the press, like musquitos in a night of August, make no scruple to use every means to stop the pen by artifice, by calumny, by menace, by more mean, base, unmanly, ungenerous and ungentlemanly detraction, than the most rancorous old tea-drinking midwife in Europe would stoop to make use of. From such things the man of honour, and the gentleman, recoil as they would from the sting of a snake, the pollution of a jakes, or the infection of a jail distemper. That there are persons who, according to the notions of men of their own kidney pass for, and expect to be called gentlemen, and yet mix with this throng of mud larks, we have heard; but let it be recollected, that it is not a set of patriot words, or monkey actions, or fiddliug and fluting, or capering, or bowing like a dancing master; not horses, carriages, side tables stored with Madeira, and boards groaning under the sluttish, ill assorted plenty of fungous pride; nor fine houses, nor fine clothes— No! nor even rank or office, that can constitute the Gentleman. The gentleman, that character than which none can pretend to one higher, is seated in the head and from early habit and disposition is immoveable, unmixed, unchangeable and eternally the same. The real gentleman is as unalterable in his way, as the jacobin is in his. Some of the most mean, abandoned and contemptible characters that ever brought disgrace upon that respectable profession—the Actor—have been able to assume the character of the gentleman for five acts of a play, six nights in a week; but they were as far from gentlemen, in the mean, as any ragged Newgate bird that ever graced a gibbet. The gentleman must be uniform in his conduct, or all the letters of nobility of all the kings since the days of SOLOMON, would but leave him stuck in his native mire. If persons, having in general respects a claim to this character, hope under cover of superficial manners, and extrinsic qualities, to mask those practices which disgrace even the vilest pretenders to manhood, they ought to be laid bare to view; their patents ought to be shook.

But, to return to the subject with which we set out. We say that nothing is more evident than this, that there is an universal conspiracy among the democrats to crush the freedom of political discussion, and to stifle reason and argument. In every essay of theirs the Bastile and the Bowstring are legibly written. In their underhand efforts, (aye in those of some who would be thought above such things) we can trace the spirit of the Holy Brotherhood working like an old mole, or rather like an old gossip, and making inquisition for slander, purveying and prowling for food for personal scandal, in order to stop the discussion of political subjects; for out of discussion truth emanates, and to them truth is death.

The passage taken by the democratic writers from the Port Folio, and bandied about of late, has been actually called treasonable and seditious. Here we see, as with a glass, the germ of the worst tyranny. With men who are either so shameless as to maintain a proposition knowing it to be wrong, or so ignorant in the meaning of words as well as of laws as not to know that that charge is wrong, there is no use in arguing. But this we will say, that every citizen of a free country has a right to discuss abstract questions of politics, to avow his opinion, and to say, if he thinks it, that any one form of government under heaven is vicious. For our parts we will, and we wish others as well as ourselves, to make the best use of the short time which the despotism of democracy and immorality now getting to a head in this country will allow, by speaking freely and loudly our opinions, upon that spirit of policy which bids fair to be the destruction of all that deserves to be called human in the human race.

In the despotism of France, MONTESQUIEU freely discussed the merits and defects of every kind of government, and so far from being accused of treason, received unequivocal proofs of approbation from all France, and all Europe. In the same despotism, into which not an atom of democratic power had ever crept, ROUSSEAU published that most democratic work "The Social Contract," and others still worse, and never heard a word about a charge of treason or sedition. The Empress of Russia caused "Blackstone's Commentaries," in which despotism is so roughly handled, to be translated into Russian for the benefit of the people. In Denmark the most free discussions are allowed. And in England did not Tom Paine publish with impunity his "Rights of Man?" Thus in France, Russia, Denmark, and England, that discussion is authorised which is called treason in America. What! Americans, are you all blind? Do not prospective monitions visit your dreams by night, or your reveries by day? Look you through that long, fine, painted visto, which the political puppet shew men of the day have daubed upon the scene before you, do you not see the deception? Do you not perceive thro' the pores of the flimsy canvas the glimmering of the light behind? Do you not hear the buz and the laugh at you, of the performers on the stage? Do you not hear the clanking of your future fetters? No, no such thing! Then put yourselves under the guidance of those who will take you by the hand; and they will lead you in safety through the dark meanderings and complicated machinery under the stage, till they bring you behind the scenes, where they will expose to you in their raw nakedness, the paltry slips of worm-eaten pine and rotten canvas upon which the prospect that has so long deluded you is painted, and reveal to you all the deceptions, artifices, and plans of the mechanists; all the tricks and capers of the signors, and all the soft meretricious blandishments of the signoras, in this democratic pantomimical spectacle, by which you have so long been so long deceived.
